Teaching Philosophy Statement

My formative teaching experiences have not been what one might call typical. I more frequently have taught in trailers, rooms of Big Houses, community centres, and remote First Nations in-person or via video call than in the seldom classroom with desks. What matters are the people and discussions, whether it be at a university or around an Elder's dinner table, that make somewhere a place of learning. I always have seen my role in the field of linguistics, with a primary audience of Indigenous language advocates and learners, equally and complementarily as both a facilitator and a teacher.

Collaboration and Behaviour Modelling

While I am comfortable performing duties as a sole instructor in-person, online, and hybrid teaching models, I am a strong supporter of co-instruction. The intrinsic collaborative atmosphere that co-teaching brings to a setting is invaluable to the student experience. As students see different educators work together to express ideas, share knowledge, and support each other, they are provided a framework to do so themselves with their peers effectively. This same dynamic can be demonstrated between students and teachers daily through mutual respect, open dialogue, and authentic efforts to be present in learning.

In my experience, students come to their first linguistics courses because of their own interests, not simply as a graduation requirement. Language is the great unifier; it is ubiquitous to us as human beings. There is always something related to language happening in our lives. Students may be multilingual themselves and want to know why they codeswitch only in certain contexts, are interested in trying to learn a new language more quickly to chat and game online or are reclaiming their own language(s) and need to decipher dictionaries and grammars now on this journey. I always want to know how I can best support my students' learning, which involves knowing individuals holistically and their motivations, goals, and studies.

Since the start of my teaching journey, I have been fortunate to have had the opportunity to lead workshops and classes with Indigenous language advocates, Elders, and Knowledge Holders. As a non-Indigenous person myself, I believe it is my responsibility to maintain good relations and uphold the obligations I am asked to bear as an active participant in protocols. In this practice, I will always uplift the traditional and experiential knowledge that students bring themselves, Indigenous and non-Indigenous alike, into my learning spaces. I course acknowledge this knowledge sharing from Elders I welcome often as co-instructors in these settings. I believe that these insights and teachings must be built into the bases of instruction at every appropriate opportunity, which requires adaptation, revision, and listening on my part as an individual and educator.

In the beginning of my tenure as the instructor of the revamped Urban Haílzaqv̓la (Heiltsuk language) Program during the COVID-19 pandemic, we were moved online from the usual in-person gatherings in East Vancouver. A student, a mother and matriarch in the class, asked at the second session for two things: "when you count down, I love that you go '... yúdukv (three) ... mə́lúkv (two) ... m̓núkv (one) ...' but can we go 'wái (okay)' at the end too? We don't know when to answer you," and "Can I begin with a Haílzaqv̓ prayer?" From that point forward, we started class with someone h̓m̓yáxlá (praying) and ended countdowns with wái.

Relationships are Everything

The legacies of outsider linguists and academics who have worked with Indigenous communities are remembered not by what these people accomplished or later published in journals, but by the relationships they chose to foster and maintain.

What informs my pedagogical philosophy now more than ever is this tenet of relationship: relationship to knowledge and concepts, to people and communities, to cohorts and individuals, to place.

We would be remiss to think education cannot often be seen as a barrier too. I have heard, “I don’t have the education necessary [to understand/],” or “I was not educated [good enough],” as students encounter jargon and definitions about their languages or linguistics that seem foreign or unfamiliar. How does one change this dynamic?

As an educator, I refuse to start from a place of deficit of others, especially in learning environments. I reject a perspective that certain concepts and ideas are simply too complex for individuals or groups of individuals or that some are predisposed due to their backgrounds and experiences inherently to fail. That is not to say that I think the learning journey will be smooth, linear, and without challenges, but rather success is always reachable if the student pursues it. I believe a negative relationship with academia can be reserved through transparency and active dialogue on the part of the student and the teacher.

Transparency and Curiosity

In the resources I create and immersive and reflective exercises I carve into my courses, I centre the decoding of jargon and contextualization of linguistic phenomena into meaningful, accessible terms for learners. It has taken time to find a balance to this approach. The tailoring of content and right mode of delivery are essential and change for every cohort of learners, based on their backgrounds, goals, and prior experiences within the scope of the material. I am transparent in my assessments as well, making rubrics and grading clear when relevant. I believe that there is always constructive feedback to be provided and that when students have clarity in what is expected of them, they are better able to reach their goals and meet high standards.

I am also transparent in my own unknowing. I ensure learners that I too am still figuring out certain patterns in language myself or am unsure how universal some purported language universals might be! And, while I might not have all the answers, I am open and eager to trying to find them even if I might stumble along the process. I find these techniques foster epistemic curiosity and help to build life-long learners. It is these relationships forged between lessons and theories explored in the classroom to students’ memories and own observations of the world and speech contexts that I seek to promote.

During an Urban Haítzaqṽla drop-in session, an aunty came by and shared to the teaching assistant and myself: “when I was taking out the trash last night, I was walking to the can and I remembered my mother saying this word, telling me to take out the q̃báci (garbage pail). I hadn’t heard that word in years. I think it must have been the class doing something with my híxti (head).” We had never talked about garbage in class, but we had discussed the <-àci> suffix that means, “to hold/contain something.”

I do not plan for this serendipity or attempt to manufacture it. I trust that by ensuring language, lessons, and I myself am accessible to learners, meaningful connections can be derived and carried forward by students. It is hard to know sometimes where individuals are on their own learning paths. I have come to find myself often at the start of new journeys and intellectual inquiries for students, which I count as a success. I aspire to share my passion for this work and field and make sure students know they have someone along side them on this road who is another life-long student with resources to share.

Urban Haíłzaqvł̓a Program

Lesson Planning, Classroom Management & Mentoring

2017 – 2021

The Urban Haíłzaqvł̓a (Heiltsuk language) Program is a grassroots initiative near to my wúwáx̌di (heart and mind). The program was started by language teacher Elizabeth Tite née Wilson in 2017 as a space for the Urban Haíłzaqv community to have continued access to its language and culture away from home. I had the fortune to be able to assist with the program's development through a Memorandum of Understanding at the time between the Haíłzaqv Nation and the University of British Columbia.

I would later go on to help coordinate the program and then hold the position of instructor during the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic. As non-Haíłzaqv, acknowledgement of my positionality was of the utmost importance throughout my tenure. Having a non-Haíłzaqv linguist teach one's own language could be seen to contribute to a colonial, patriarchal dynamic. There was support from the community in Wágl̓isł̓a (Bella Bella) and náłkv̓ (the city) in my role, and through an active consciousness in my teaching, the revamped cohort found great success.

With the inclusion of Urban Elders whenever possible and the communicative design of the sessions (online and in-person when permitted), I was able to foster an intergenerational learning experience with the support of Teaching Assistants and the class itself, guiding cohort members through the orthography (writing system). We were able to touch on complex areas of the language like its grammar paradigms and the production of difficult sounds, leading into the beginning of conversational fluency for some.

Lesson plans and the scope were reflective of students' interests and applicable language and scenarios to use Haíłzaqvł̓a in their everyday lives.

The program was not without its challenges. To create a classroom culture in a language revitalization context, one must be able to foster an environment for learners with diverse life experiences and relationships with language. If cases arose that constituted lateral violence, once recognized, direct address was taken privately and with grace with the individual and documentation was drafted in case of escalation for program management. As teachers, it is our responsibility to respond and take it upon ourselves to be educated in trauma-informed care practices to ensure the safety and well-being of all students. These practices and the framework of the program itself were carried forward once internal capacity was grown. The Urban Haíłzaqvł̓a (Heiltsuk language) Program now is proud to operate with a full Haíłzaqv teaching and administrative staff.

“Ben has offered resources to building a stronger knowledge base and capacity for leading a classroom. The resources include multiple readings, and the 7th International Conference on Language Documentation & Conservation (ICLDC) conference. These resources have been relevant to my own personal growth as a language learner. They have opened my eyes to the possibilities of this field being a career and a lifelong journey for the future of the Haíłzaqv people. It has been an inspiration for me to further myself as a Haíłzaqv member.

Ben has freely shared his knowledge, and expertise with me, as well as connecting me with elder support. All of which has been used in building capacity to transition me to leading language classes. Ben goes above and beyond his role as the Lead Instructor to create a space of language growth. This naturally allows us as Hailzaqv members, an opportunity to heal and grow in our own personal well being. He accepts whichever state or wellbeing a person enters the classroom or meeting space and continues his lesson plan. He has acknowledged and understands the struggles of learning your own ancestral language and offers support and encouragement for personal empowerment.

In the classroom, Ben leads in a gentle way, while providing a firm structure to cover the required content. He provides explanations of words, roots, prefixes, suffixes and word structure in each lesson provided. He breaks them down and offers examples on how to use specific structures in multiple ways. Ben is open to new ideas from the classroom in terms of content, class time, review and personal stories. Ben has also been available aside from classroom time to help with personal translations and is flexible to other peoples' schedules. When any conflict arises, he is quick to defuse them in a respectful manner that continues to honor the space of the other party.

Ben shows support outside of the classroom by having mine, and other language learners' best interest at heart. He honors when someone needs space, time or debriefing in order for each individual to reach success and growth."

Community-Based Trainings

Learning By Doing & Real-World Application of Knowledge

2022 – 2024

During my time at First Peoples' Cultural Council (FPCC), I was a key trainer on digitization, archiving, and language media topics for the Language Technology Program (LTP). I co-facilitated and individually led numerous workshops that ranged from how to perform technical processes to conceptual planning around archival and language metadata. These sessions combined a bricolage of linguistics-related topics and revitalization themes like Part-of-Speech (POS) tagging, the historical contexts and trends in language documentation, and language use and domains with advancements in technology. Workshops were between two to five days in-community, included tailored curricula, and integrated protocols based on the territory to which we were invited or hosted sessions.

"At the heart of Ben's teaching is a commitment to building meaningful relationships, creating an environment where learning becomes a shared journey. Through collaboration and support, he empowers students to grow together and discover their fullest potential."

Audiocassette & Language Material Digitization

Nuxalk Nation (Bella Coola) – Training Requested by Nation

Spring 2022

Topics focused on digitization of audio-cassette tapes and print materials, audio-restoration, and cataloguing methods to archive language data in culturally appropriate frameworks.

Co-facilitated with Kyra Borland.

Audiocassette & Language Material Digitization

Wuikinuḡv Nation (Rivers Inlet) – Training Requested by Nation

Spring 2022

Topics focused on digitization of audio-cassette tapes and print materials, audio-restoration, and cataloguing methods to archive language data in culturally appropriate frameworks. An initial archival space assessment and walkthrough of safe storage practices were done in-community.

Co-facilitated with Kyra Borland.

Language Resource Development & Digital Storage Practices

Ts'mysen Sm'algyax Language Authority & Gitxaala Nation in Lax Kxeen (Prince Rupert) – Training Requested by Organization & Nation

Summer 2023

Themes and tutorials included audio-recording set-up, archival space assessment and walkthrough of safe storage practices, and audio-editing. Special attention was provided on how to install and set up software and other tools useful for linguistic analysis and language revitalization needs.

Lead facilitator with Magie-Mae Adams (WSÁNEĆ/ Lingít) and James Thompson, PhD.

Controlled Vocabularies & Information Management

With Tseshah Nation in ɕuumaɕas (Port Alberni) – Training Requested by Nation

Summer 2023

Curriculum centred on approaches to process and catalogue linguistic metadata from resources and recordings. Sessions were productive through interactive brainstorming and discussions of workflow phase mapping.

Lead facilitator with Evangaline Prevost (Ahousah) and stimaat Carleen August (Quw'utsun).

“I have had the privilege to work along side Ben and watch him present in webinars, presentations, and trainings. He is always well prepared and knowledgeable in his teaching. He has a good way of explaining and engaging with people, where they feel comfortable and happy to ask questions. He has created many helpful and useful tools that I use and send to people, like our grammar lessons, as one example. He is a wealth of knowledge and good energy which makes it a fun learning environment when he teaches.”

Language Technology Program Training 2023-2024: Prince George

Multi-Nation training workshop series in Lheidli-T'enneh (Prince George)

Summer 2023

Multiple learning streams were offered, which included documentation and archiving-centred options as well as introductory crash courses on these themes for new learners. I designed both streams of training curricula and facilitated the archival sessions as the sole instructor.

Lead facilitator with James Thompson, PhD, Bridget Chase, Evangaline Prevost (Ahousaht), and Cara Barter (Gitando, Tsm'syen).

Language Technology Program Training 2023-2024: Vancouver

Multi-Nation training workshop series on xʷməθkʷəy̓əm (Musqueam), Skwxwú7mesh (Squamish), and səliłwətał (Tsleil-Waututh) Territories (Vancouver)

Summer 2023

Multiple learning streams were offered, which included documentation and archiving-centred options as well as more intensive one-on-one blocks on these themes for experienced language revitalizationists. I designed both streams of training curricula and facilitated the archival sessions as the sole instructor.

Lead facilitator with James Thompson, PhD, Bridget Chase, Evangaline Prevost (Ahousaht), and Clarissa Forbes, PhD.

“Ben Chung's teaching style is patient, informative, and highly engaging. When I participated in his Language and Technology training, I found that he had a way of breaking down complex concepts into clear, manageable steps, ensuring that everyone—regardless of their prior experience—could follow along. He created an encouraging learning environment where questions were always welcome, and he took the time to ensure each participant understood the material before moving forward.

His approach was hands-on and practical, allowing us to immediately apply what we learned. He balanced technical instruction with real-world applications, making the training both useful and relevant. His deep knowledge and enthusiasm for both language and technology were evident, and his patience made the learning process smooth and enjoyable.”

Transcription with ELAN: Controlled Vocabularies with Haida

Virtually at Haida Heritage Centre at Kay 'Llnagaay, Hlgaagilda/ Skidegate – Invited Talk Winter 2024

As part of the Haida Language Gathering 2024, I presented on using ELAN software to transcribe and document Haida language, note differences cross-dialectically, and export these texts for language curriculum development. Elders were interested in subtitling capabilities and further training on these topics.

Co-facilitated with Jaskwaan Bedard (PhD candidate, tenure-track instructor at Simon Fraser University).

Knowledge Base Curriculum Design

Responsive Curriculum Development & Resource Accessibility

2020 – 2024

Alongside in-person, virtual, and hybrid teaching sessions, I also was responsible for the creation and expansion of online curricula related to FPCC's Digitization and FirstVoices components within the LTP.

Curriculum was designed with all levels of learners in mind. Topics surround the technical processes related to digitization of legacy materials, conceptual themes around how to organize archives and collections, and strategic planning exercises to integrate traditional protocols into archival access policies.

These resources that include interactive modules, video tutorials, and printable handouts are housed on an open Knowledge Base site. Specific lesson series were produced on Articulate360 for hosting on the Knowledge Bases themselves or alternately Moodle.

I also contributed to the sister resource hub dedicated to language documentation and recording practices to support FirstVoices projects and teams.

Lessons included walkthroughs of recording methods, community testimonials on their successes and challenges in these processes, and grammatical descriptions of common patterns in language that one will encounter working with first language speakers.

I find a joy in curriculum building and design. I believe in the foundations of a strong scope and sequence. How language and context are taught can be flexible within these parameters as long as input remains within the general zone of proximal development for learners and with adjustable scaffolding.

Whether it is about complex grammatical topics, metalinguistic definitions, or how-tos to use recording techniques and technologies, I ensure there are entry points for all students to engage with my materials with guidance.

Haíłzaqvł̓a Language Nest Curriculum

Immersion & Cultural Knowledge Sharing

2021 – 2022

For the launch of the Haíłzaqvł̓a Language Nest, I was contracted to design the first immersion curriculum for Haíłzaqvł̓a child acquisition. This curriculum would serve as a basis from which the Language Nest staff would draw and constitutes the first materials of this kind in the language. In collaboration with the Haíłzaqvł̓a Revitalization Department, I was tasked to create a twelve-unit thematic curriculum to teach zero to four years old infants in the language exclusively for five to seven hours a day. The language nest model from Hawai'i and Aotearoa (New Zealand) is one of the most successful language revitalization strategies, and the number of nests regionally in what is now British Columbia is growing. Language Nest curriculum includes classroom management, assessment, survival phrases, and other everyday expressions in the target language that teachers must stay in for the setting to be full immersion.

The outlined units were chosen by Elders and the Haíłzaqvł̓a Revitalization team based of cultural significance, including berries, herring, salmon, cedar, and family terms/kinship. Each unit contained a scope and sequence with initial vocabulary banks and phrases for teachers to use and a range of activities, games, songs, and projects to undertake in the language that integrated units' specific vocabulary and terms. Language structure was taught through the modelling of speech by the teachers and Elders. I provided translations, transcriptions, and activity descriptions, and there was constant communication with the team in community for fine-tuning of this curriculum. Vocabulary and lessons were reviewed, edited, and recorded by Elders for appropriateness and accessibility for the teaching staff to practice themselves.

The Haíłzaqvł̓a Language Nest continues to operate and is looking to grow in class size. It plans to expand into higher grade levels for sásm̓ (children) to remain in the language scholastically until hopefully Grade 12.

Appendix D: Letter of Thanks (Haíłzaqvł̓a Revitalization Language)

Language Nest Instructor Training

Communicative Methodologies

In addition to the development of the new Language Nest curriculum, I led a complementary workshop for the teachers and staff of the daycare. The weeklong workshop series in Wágłísł̓a was held in the Gvukva'áus Haíłzaqv̓ (Home of the Heiltsuk): the community Big House.

Elders, Early Child Educator (ECE) staff, and advanced language learners who would be the teachers in the Language Nest were all present. The workshops were designed to address and explore how children are thought to acquire language and practices that adults can use in teaching language to infants and children in an immersion setting.

The general teacher training focus was a critical component to delve into with the new team. In preparation of this topic, it also let me evaluate my own language teaching techniques and review linguistic and language acquisition theories relevant to a Language Nest setting. The development stages observed in infants' English acquisition and careful considerations around error-correction were discussed. Curriculum design processes and lesson planning were also outlined and walked through as a capacity-building measure for the teachers to use on their own as the Language Nest progressed and required new activities and adjustments in materials.

Recording of new song content and experimental game play were also fun, inclusive activities for participants.

The sessions were also guided by Elders' input and cultural directions. The shape and goals of the Language Nest were important to construct around their insights and knowledge. They were keystone contributors to the alignment of expectations and visioning of what the Language Nest should be and strive for as a place for Haítzaqv̓la and sás̓m̓ (children).

The training itself was comprehensive and was a space to problematize how preconceived notions of language acquisition, learning, and teaching do not fit well within Indigenous Language Nests. Looking at other successful models of full immersion, participants and I discussed what was clear to them about these other Nests. Letting children make mistakes in the language and instead modelling structures and pronunciation were a clear change in how participants thought about language education and the teacher-student relationship at large. The importance of recognising that they can be confident as teachers while still being learners themselves was also paramount and achieved in these workshops.

Teaching Assistantships Classroom Support & Tutorials 2024 – Present

As a graduate student, I have the opportunity to be a teaching assistant (TA) at Simon Fraser University. To date, I have assisted in courses within the Indigenous Language and Linguistics Graduate program:

Spring 2025	LING 832 G110: Narrative and Discourse Structure of an Indigenous Language Simon Fraser University – Dr. Marianne Ignace
Fall 2024	LING 833 G110: Socio-cultural and Cognitive Aspects of an Indigenous Language Simon Fraser University – Dr. Marianne Ignace

Classes for the program are typically held online over Zoom; however, there are in-person components that include guest speakers, student presentations, and coverage of topics best facilitated in-person (e.g., interactive language teaching pedagogies) every term.

Duties have included the organization of online and in-person class materials, participation in in-person workshop sessions, leading breakout groups online, writing support for students, and assignment marking.

As a TA, I also hold ad hoc tutorials on topics requested by the students including citation review sessions and writing salons to ask questions and practice articulating their ideas to their peers. Resources for these sessions are self-created, and I schedule and host the materials and tutorials using the courses' Canvas Learning Management System (LMS) platform.

UHLAP will be held online indefinitely to incorporate Urban Haílzaqv who live on Vancouver Island as well as minimize cost of food and materials. Classes will be hosted online via a video meeting platform (Zoom) 3 times a week for specified term lengths.

Class size: 20 enrolled students (10 Vancouver Island-based + 10 Lower Mainland-based)

Requirements: No prior knowledge of Haílzaqv!a is necessary; access to a computer or streaming device is required; and, continued attendance in all classes is expected.

General Weekly Schedule

Monday Class	Wednesday Class	Sunday Class
Time: 6:00 PM – 7:30 PM (1.5 Hrs)	Time: 6:00 PM – 7:30 PM (1.5 Hrs)	Time: 12:30 PM – 2:30 PM (2 Hrs)
Attendees: All enrolled class members (10 Vancouver students & 10 Island students).	Attendees: All enrolled class members (10 Vancouver students & 10 Island students).	Attendees: All enrolled class members (10 Vancouver students & 10 Island students) and all Urban Haílzaqv who want to participate.

Enrolled students should attend all classes including open-community classes. If a student has a conflict, said student should let either the Instructor or TA know prior to class.

Missing more than a week of class (3 classes) will be cause for discussion. We will work with students to make a solid study and practice plan when possible if these cases arise.

One's success in the class is tied to one's level of commitment, frequency of practice, and overall engagement.

Learning Goals:

By the end of this class, students will be able to ...

- Understand and pronounce statements with Haíłzaqv pronouns (I, you, he/she/it/they, we (inclusive), we (exclusive))
- Describe and narrate their family trees
- Ask and answer yes & no questions and basic description questions
- Understand when the future and past are used
- Comfortably assess and learn unknown Haíłzaqv words they encounter in the future
- Know at least 30 practical Haíłzaqv word families to use in the city

Cohort students will be given weekly prompts to reflect on and journaling is encouraged. These students are also expected to independently practice Haíłzaqvł̥a throughout the week and having a document of these times is encouraged.

Topics by Week (subject to change):

Notes

- Particular weeks of the term will be devoted heavily for review and conversational practices.
- Sunday classes will condense the major topics and lessons from the week, and cohort students will be encouraged to share and be leaders in these sessions.
- UHLAP will include Elders (particularly those who reside outside of Wáglísla) as much as possible given their and the program's capacity. Students will hear fluent and conversant speakers through FirstVoices and other heritage recordings.

- This is an ungraded course. And, weekly assignments will be reflective, not for completion.

Discussion Exercises for Access Protocols (Sample Activities)

Knowledge Base
Curriculum

Discussion Exercises for Access Protocols

IMPORTANT: Before beginning these exercises, you must have participants informed consent to do so. Read Informed consent on the FirstVoices Knowledge Base about what goes into obtaining and documenting informed consent.

Guidelines

You can use these exercises to begin discussions and learn more about traditional knowledge sharing practices with Elders and Knowledge Holders. These activities are meant to be collaborative and multi-modal: using different senses and response techniques to begin discussions. Through the conversations you have, you can begin to form a more culturally centred approach to access protocols surrounding archives.

Feel free to modify these exercises to best fit your needs and to remain appropriate to cultural protocols and access protocols that may already exist in your archive.

When handling and working with delicate records, keep food and drinks away from these materials. Use cotton gloves when handling certain records like film and photographs (Photographic Negatives).

In case these exercises are done during the COVID-19 pandemic, always adhere to provincial and community safety protocols and guidelines.

Operate in a well-ventilated space (if possible) and use personal protective equipment (PPE) when in proximity with other individuals.

If any party is feeling ill prior to gathering, postpone the exercises, and the affected person(s) should be encouraged to seek appropriate medical treatment.

Suggestions

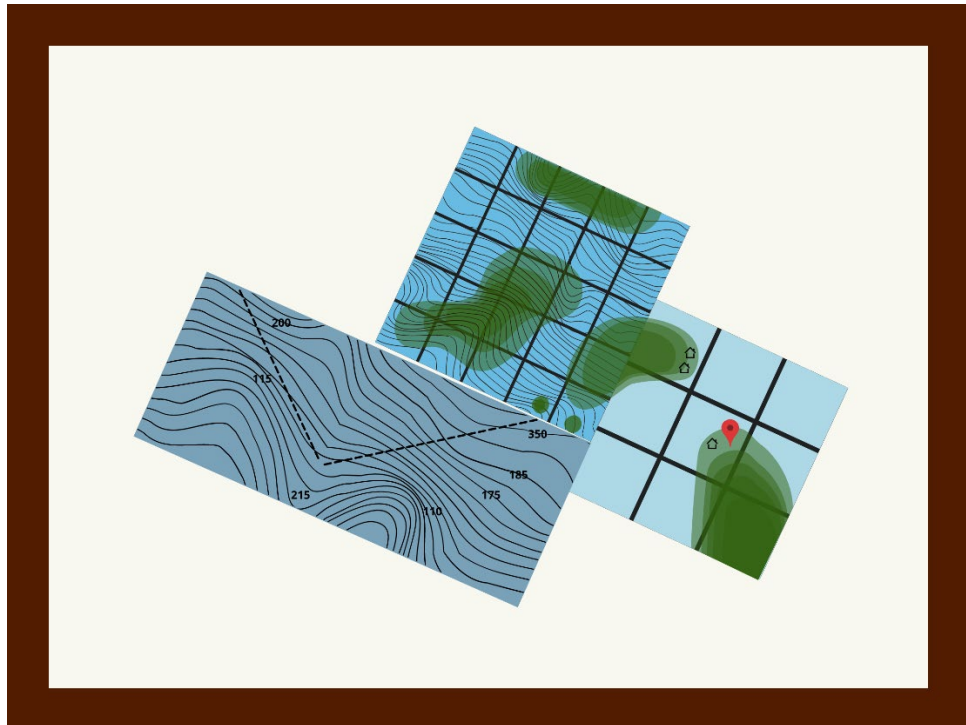

- If an Elder or Knowledge Holder has trouble seeing, bring magnifying glasses or a projector to aid them in reading small print and details.
- If an Elder or Knowledge Holder has difficulty hearing, bring a portable speaker or multiple headphones with a sharing input to aid them in listening to audio.
- Set out and prepare the space you will be working in before your Elder(s) arrive.
- Take breaks in between exercises or reviewing resources.
- If you have the informed consent to do so, consider recording the exercises for continuity and the archive's own records.

Exercise 1: Mapping

Description: Archives often contain maps and charts of territories and waterways. Some information on these documents may be in an Indigenous language and other times not. In this exercise, you will talk about placenames and memories around different locations.

Throughout the exercise, Elders or Knowledge Holders might have questions about who helped create these maps, what certain icons or characters mean on, and offer suggestions about how to improve on them in future versions. Take this feedback and provide what information you can about these resources' origins during this activity.

Step 1. Lay out your map(s)¹ and arrange them in a way so they continue into each other (see example).

Step 2. Begin by asking if anyone recognizes some frequently visited places. Note where widely recognized locations and areas are (e.g., where town is, the band store, etc.)

Step 3. Discuss: how long the town/other locations of note have been there, if there are other places where people live/used to live, and where we would find these places on the map(s).

Step 4. Ask if anyone has any stories about these places or memories they would like to share. If more than one person would like to share, take turns sharing and give everyone ample time.

¹ It is recommended that you use sturdier maps and charts compared to fragile ones for this exercise. If you are concerned about wear-and-tear, use digitized copies, or duplicates available to you.

If no one volunteers, offer up a light-hearted story yourself about a common location.

Step 5. Discuss: what is the best way to share this type of memory or a place-based story, would it be a story that can be shared, and how would someone who wants to hear this story go about finding it.

Step 6. Repeat this process with other locations/points of interest on the map(s). Let the Elders and Knowledge Holder(s) guide the conversations.

Take note of what Elders and Knowledge Holders share and what they think is important for people to know about what they describe.

Step 7. Once you have discussed and feel satisfied with the exercise, ask some closing questions for group reflection:

- What types of stories and language do you want to hear about the land and waters?
- What types of stories and language about the land and waters are you comfortable sharing?
- What stories and language about land do you think everyone should know about?

Run time: approximately 3 hours.

Exercise 2: Listening

Description: Archives that contain language materials will often contain a variety of audio recordings. Some will be more fragile than others to play, and they will all possess important information about language, culture, history, and more. In this exercise, you will listen and reflect on archival recordings.

Throughout the exercise, Elders or Knowledge Holders might have questions about who helped create these recordings originally, who digitized them, and offer suggestions about how to improve or re-record them in future versions. Take this feedback and provide what information you can about these resources' origins during this activity.

Step 1. Find three to four different audio recordings² that you can play for a group of Elders or Knowledge Holders. Consider playing different types of recordings with varying topics (e.g., one 15-minute discussion about berry-picking and an everyday conversation in the language).

² It is recommended that you select recordings that are no more than 20-minutes long in their entirety. Given the length of the exercise, long recordings can draw it out and leave Elders fatigued. If you do not get through all the recordings, you can also break the exercise into two sessions.

Step 2. Explain the sequence that you will play the recordings to the group and ask if there are any questions:

1. First Playback: The whole recording with no pauses
2. Second Playback: The recording with pauses (listeners can signal to pause to add comments)
3. Third Playback: The whole recording with no pauses

Step 3. Play the First Playback all the way through once without pauses to let everyone have a first listen.

Do a sound check that everyone could hear the recording clearly.

Step 4. Give people some time to reflect, then perform the Second Playback with pauses.

Have listeners signal (e.g., raise a hand / hold up a ping pong paddle) if they want to comment on what they hear; pause the recording and let anyone who wants to speak add to the conversation during these breaks.

Step 5. Perform the Third Playback.

Once the recording is finished, pause, and ask the group what their overall thoughts are about what was played. Discuss:

- Have you heard this recording before?
- What stood out to you about this recording?
- Who do you think would benefit from this recording?

Note down any insights from the group.

Step 6. Repeat this process with the remaining recordings you have queued. Provide time to take breaks between recordings.

Step 7. Once you have discussed and feel satisfied with the exercise, ask some closing questions for group reflection:

- How would be the best way to share the recordings we listened to today (and would you like a copy)?
- What types of stories and language are you comfortable sharing through recordings?
- Are these recordings today that we heard ones that you think everyone should know about?

Run time: 3-4 hours.

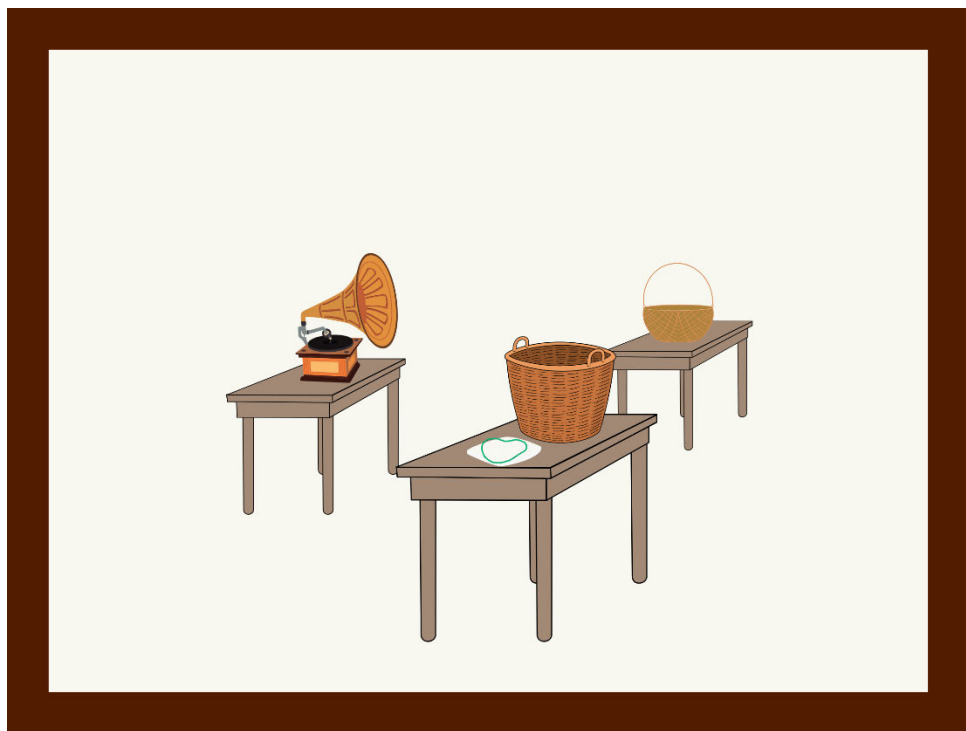

Exercise 3: Witnessing

Description: Some archives or culture centres will have many belongings or artefacts in their collections too. These tangible pieces of heritage are often good places to start and centre conversations around language.

Step 1. Gather and prepare a small assortment (4-5 tangible heritage pieces) for display and discussion.

Select objects and other belongings that you know do not have specific protocols for unveiling or presenting. Ensure that you have gloves, hand sanitizer, and other materials necessary for handling any delicate pieces.

Step 2. Station each of the pieces separately with enough room for Elders/Knowledge Holders to take turns and spend time with each set-up (see image).

If the exercise participants consent to be recorded during this exercise, you can station microphones by each of the items to record their observations

Step 3. With the group, explain what archival metadata or knowledge you have of each piece on display. Allow Elders and Knowledge Holders to take time to observe, hold, and experience these belongings.

Throughout the exercise, Elders or Knowledge Holders might have questions about who donated these items, where and how they are currently stored, and offer suggestions about how to improve care or adhere to cultural protocols with specific belongings.

Take this feedback and provide what information you can about these resources' origins and maintenance during this activity.

Step 4. Come back together as a group and provide room for people to share what they thought or remembered while interacting with the displays.

Some guiding questions for the group are:

- Who else should be able to witness and interact with these cultural objects?
- How and when is it appropriate to share them?
- What are ways to connect these belongings with language initiatives today?

Note down any insights, especially if they pertain to language or protocols around these items under discussion.

Run time: 2-3 hours.

Mutual Respect

Engaging in these sessions we will maintain a respectful and safe space where we can ask questions, make mistakes, and speak truth to power!

Care & Consideration

In these discussions, we will practice lateral kindness and care to others and ourselves. We will give ourselves the breaks we need, excuse ourselves if we need to, and consider our wellbeing.

Rising Higher

Through this week, we will share experiences, suggestions, and make plans, but we might not find all the answers. We will not stop rising and seeking to better ourselves.

Developmental Stages

In the Language Nest, we will be working with sásm̃ that will be growing up bilingual.

- Stages might be a little different
- They will influence each other
- Sásm̃ will be in different stages too
- There likely will be a delay in some areas (> 1 year)

*Note: This acquisition will be unbalanced

(Balcazar, 2009)

(Smith, Guerrero, Surrain, & Gigi, 2021)

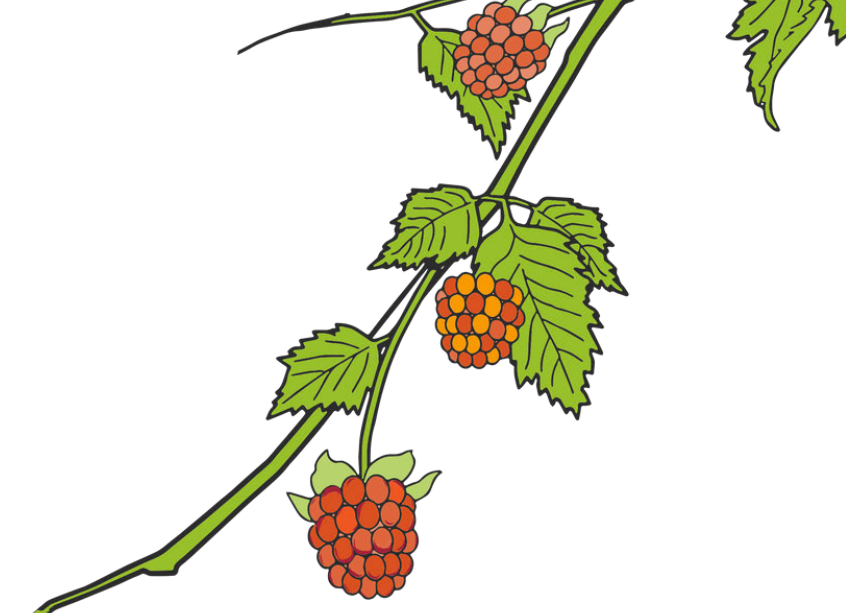

Processional

We need to understand and monitor progress closely and accept that students will both stride and waiver throughout their time in the Language Nest!

Error Correction

How we go about 'correcting' what we see and hear as errors must be done very carefully.

Some steps and suggestions

Modelling

Language Nest workers and Elders need to simply model speech!

Error correction will come naturally.

Time

Patience is key in these stages as well. It will take time for these changes to occur.

It is important that sásm̐ have enough exposure time.

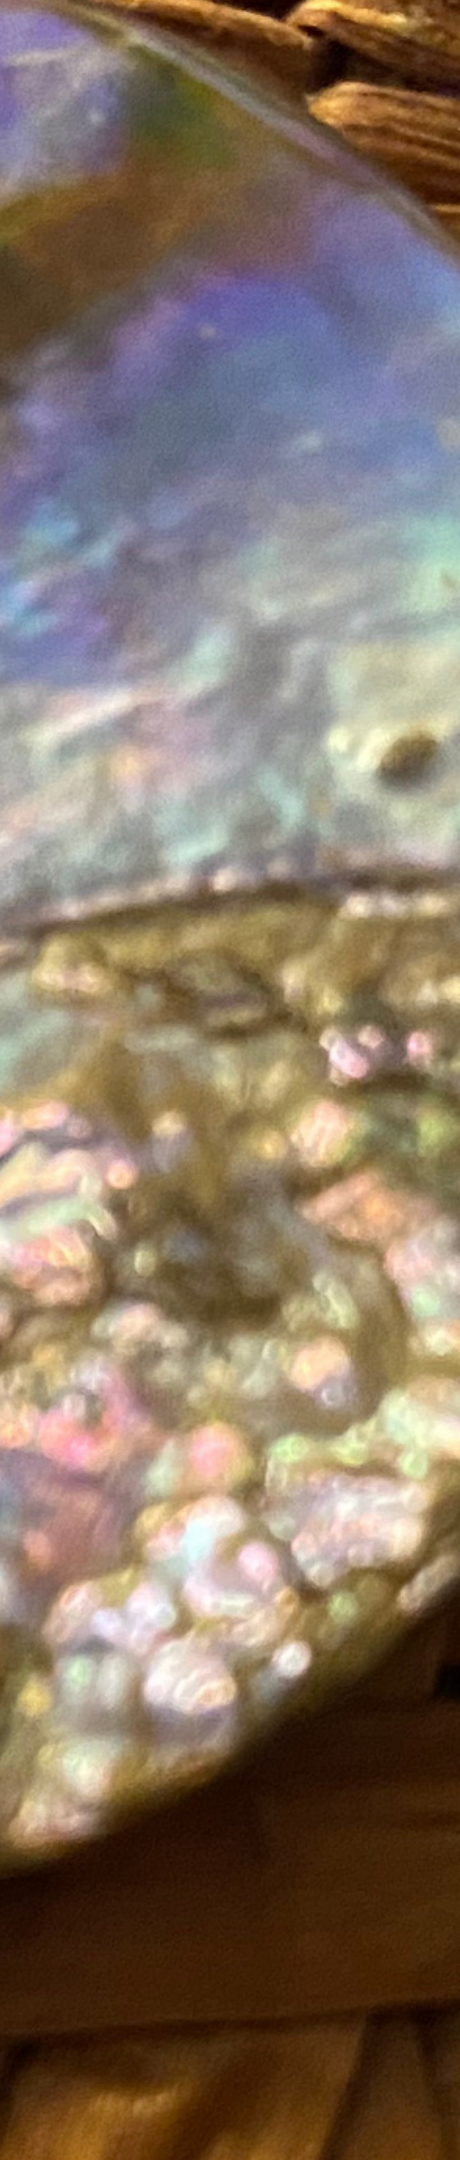

Affective Filter

Relationship and attitudes to language start early for learners and affect learning.

Let's look into this feature ...

(Krashen, 1982)

Affective Filter

- The influence of affective factors or 'emotional' and 'situational' experiences related to language and learning in second language acquisition

Motivation

High motivation tends to lead to more successful second language acquisition

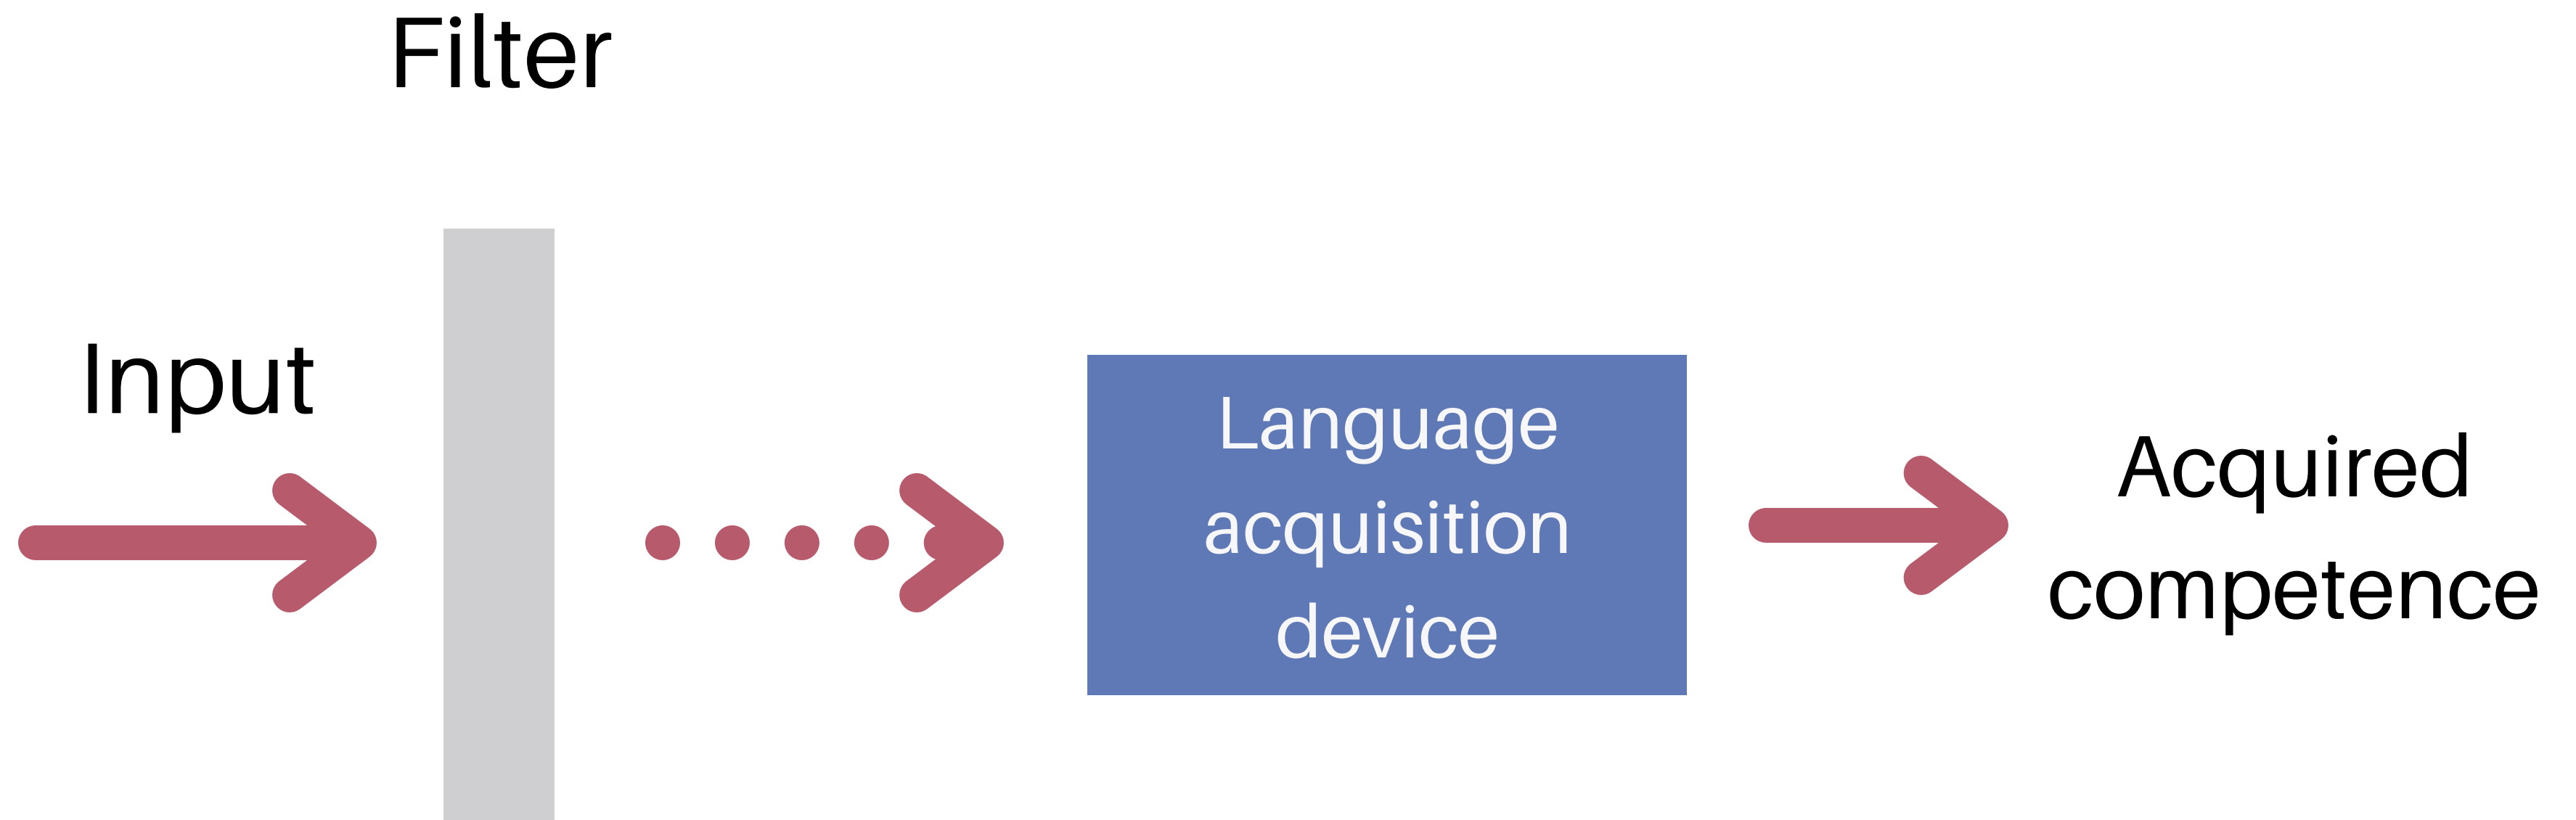

Self-confidence

Good self-image and confidence correlate with successful second language acquisition

Anxiety

Low environmental and personal anxiety also lead to successful acquisition

- Explains both blocks and acceleration in acquisition

(Krashen, 1982)

Suggestions

Nurture

Remember that these years are also formative to sásm's attitudes about language.

Create these positive associations; they will carry them forward.

Be aware of stages

Keep the developmental stages in mind.

Self-correction will occur, so overcorrecting (potentially stressing) a ǵvŋúkv about these 'errors' is not advised.

Observe

Monitor how and what drives the sásm to speak and what doesn't.

Identify anxieties and stressors that might be hindering speech and development.

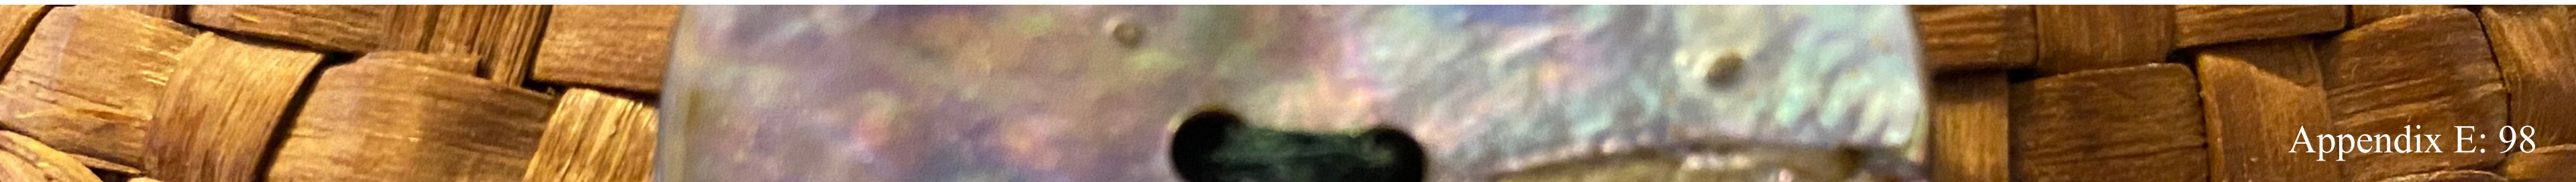

Thoughts? Implementation? Questions?

Have I considered how the 'Affective Filter' has affected my learning?

How long will delays or gaps last?

How do we observe growth?

What's next?
